HEBREW BURIAL CUSTOM.

IT CAUSES A SENSATIONAL STORY
ABOUT THE DEATH OF MRS.
WOOLFAN—CAUSE OF HER SUDDEN DEATH NOT KNOWN.

The peculiar burial customs of the Hebrews have been the cause of all sorts of reports concerning the death and burial of Mrs. Woolfan, the wife of Bill Woolfan, who conducts a tailor shop at 607 Tower avenue. The family lived at the corner of Butler avenue and Twenty-fourth street, at which place Mrs. Woolfan died, Tuesday afternoon, at 4 o'clock. Mrs. Woolfan became very sick, complaining of severe pains in the stomach and side. Mr. Woolfan soon after called a doctor, and shortly after 6 o'clock, Dr. L. W. Bebe arrived and prescribed medicine.

Wednesday morning, shortly after 2 o'clock, the pain became unbearable, and Mrs. Woolfan insisted on taking a warm bath to alleviate the pain, and it was while endeavoring to follow out her desires against the wishes of those about her that she became unconscious. Dr. Bebe was called but the woman died before he arrived.

Following the Hebrew custom of burial soon after death, the body was taken to Duluth at 4 o'clock Wednesday afternoon, and from some source a story was started that Mrs. Woolfan's body was still warm, but the Hebrew friends of the family and I. Buzelon, who has charge of the funeral arrangements, ridicule such a story. They say they waited for some time after the woman's death, to make sure of it, after the doctor had pronounced life extinct. Mr. Buzelon states that the burial of the remains occurred at 5:15 yesterday morning, and that beside himself there were a number of Superior and Duluth Hebrew friends about the grave, including six or seven women. Mr. Buzelon thinks that it was this, coupled with the fact that the watchman stayed around there for some time, gave rise to the rumors of the woman not being dead when she was buried. About the body turning over during the night, Mr. Buzelon pronounces preposterous. The stories that have been circulated, he says, are fabrications.

The friends of the family are satisfied of the death of the woman—but some of them are anxious to know the cause of death. Whether or not it was caused by heart failure or poison taken at some time by the woman, or some other cause is not known, and the friends wish to ascertain the facts.

It is a Jewish custom that no one but one of that faith shall have charge of a funeral of one of their own race, explained Mr. Buzelon, the funeral director, and further, that as soon as a person is pronounced dead, the body is immediately interred. It is the custom in this city as it is all over the world. In Europe where the Jewish laws are inclined to be very strict in this respect, bodies are often buried at midnight during the worst storms that may be raging, in order to conform to the established laws of the Jews. In the grave the body is laid on the earth, but at each side and on top are placed boards, this being another strict custom. As in every case, so it was in this case, every bit of earth removed to make room for the body, must go back into the grave and on top, so that, as one Hebrew stated, the woman should have all that belongs to her.

In this case of the interment of Mrs. Woolfan a watchman stayed at the grave to put back every piece of dirt that had been removed in the making of the grave, and this was another cause of the reports that got abroad in regard to the woman being buried alive.

As an instance of the curious belief of the Jews in this respect, the Hebrews of this city have a piece of ground, which was bought expressly for burial purposes, but no family will consent to be the first to inter the body of any deceased one in this cemetery, so the bodies are taken to Duluth, as the ground there has been broken for burial purposes.

But what the friends of the deceased woman in this case are anxious about is the cause of her death. They wish to have the matter investigated.
