

CARRIES LOST BOY AND DRAGS DRUNK TO HEADQUARTERS

Patrolman Isaacson has acquired the art of carrying incorrigible children and drunken men in his arms a la human patrol wagon.

Isaacson was standing on Superior street near Lake avenue when little 5-year-old Jimmy Segal, son of Morris Segal, 213 East Fifth street, a city health inspector, wandered up the street yesterday morning. Isaacson thought from the boy's action that he had run away from home and took the lad into his custody. Later Jimmy was returned to his father.

Yesterday afternoon Isaacson again saw the youngster and again took him into custody. The policeman brought the boy into a fruit store at Lake avenue and Superior street while he telephoned Mr. Segal. In the meantime the child ran out the door and started towards the aerial bridge. Then Isaacson started in pursuit, but was hindered by an intoxicated man.

After catching Jimmy, the patrolman carried the boy and then picked up the "drunk." and half carrying, half dragging the man, brought both to police headquarters.
