

Lithuania Is On The Mend, Aver Duluth Visitors

Workmen under the Lithuanian government are enjoying better working conditions than before the World war. That is the information brought from that country by Hirsch and Morris Heifets, two young men who have arrived in Duluth. They left their home in Zuglonsky, 35 miles west of Vilna, early in February.

"The Lithuanian government is far more liberal than any regime they have had in that part of the country before," said Hirsch Heifets, "but there is a great unrest there among the workmen. Just what they want is not clear. They are anxious to overthrow their government which is somewhat similar to your government, and join the Bolsheviks. The farmers are well satisfied with their conditions, as are the business men, and the workmen will find a great deal of opposition should they start a revolution there. A few days before we left Kuglonsky, a large quantity of arms and ammunition procured by the workmen was found in Vilkomir and Kovno."

The two young men underwent a great deal of hardship from the time of the outbreak of the war until they were at the point of embarkation at Antwerp. Even now, their native town Zuglonsky is the "no man's land" between the Lithuanians and Poles.

The young men are making their home with their aunt and uncle, Mr. and Mrs. Julius Garon, 1611 Jefferson street. Their parents are still in the old country.
