

Engineers Recall St. Patrick's Day on College Campus

College days, when St. Patrick's day was made a gala occasion with huge parades and the kissing of the blarney stone by the juniors of the engineering college, were recalled by 20 engineers from three universities of the middle west at a banquet in the Spalding hotel last night. It was the first St. Patrick's day banquet of engineering graduates in Duluth and they decided to make the celebration an annual event in Duluth.

Practically all the engineers and architects who were at the banquet are Knights of St. Patrick, dubbed knights after kissing the sacred blarney stone, "that came right from Ireland."

L. M. Mitchell was toastmaster. The Knights from the University of Minnesota who attended were:

L. M. Mitchell, '15; J. G. Dorsey, '15; J. T. Quigley, '15; C. M. Hanna, '16; F. A. Dever, '20; H. J. Korslund, '20; Charles Segelbaum, '19; H. E. Berg-hult, '23; M. J. Anderson, '20; O. F. Beeman, '21; Harold Coe, '19; H. E. Bernt, '20; E. O. Gould, '20 and Harry Knudson, '16. Paul Lillard, graduate of the '15 class of the University of Wisconsin and Alfred Norberg, graduate of the Illinois class of '16 also were present. The engineers came from northern Minnesota and Wisconsin for the banquet.
