ELTINGE THEATRE

Being aware of the fact that a great deal of comedy occurs every day monest the sober routine of a business office. Johnny Hines chose "The Wright Idea," an original story by Jack Townley, a young newspaper man, as his latest comedy vehicle. The offering comes to the Eltinge Theatre today for two days.

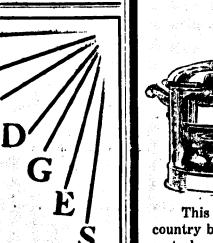

The hilarious situations arise as Johnny Hines, in the role of the young happy-go-lucky inventor, tries to get to the inner offices of the big bosses with his luminous, blotterless

A romance develops between Johnny and a pretty stenographer, played by Louise Lorraine, and this is said to be decidedly different from the usual brand of comedy romances. The girl suspects Johnny of stealing some bonds from her, but hesitates to accuse him because she likes him. Though his actions make her suspicious, especially when he invites her to a party aboard a yacht, she docs not voice her doubts.

C. C. Burr has chosen a splendid cast of players to support the comedian, with Louise Lorraine playing the leading feminine role.
