

PARENTS UNAWARE OF SON'S DEATH

Announcement Is Postponed to Avoid Marring Couple's
Happy Reunion.

Ignorant of the death of their son, the parents of Harry Levin whose body was interred at the Jewish cemetery here Monday were to have been reunited after a long separation at New York yesterday. Fearing the terrible news might prove fatal, the announcement of it has been postponed until after the happy meeting in New York is over.

Harry Levin met an accidental death in a mine at Virginia, where he was employed, last Thursday and as none of his relatives was known and he had been there but a short time, preparations were made to have the body interred there. An address in a letter found in his coat, however, led to the location of his brother at Eveleth and the latter at once took charge of the body and had it brought to Duluth.

At the time of the fatality the mother was hurrying by a fast ocean liner to New York where she was to join her husband and together they were to come west to meet their sons. Unable to convey the sad message which would spoil the happy reunion the remaining son wired his father only that Harry had been injured in an accident and that he need not worry as he would be well cared for.
